Research Assistant Job Description

Summary

The IWPR is seeking an energetic, dedicated Research Intern (RI) to join our team for an international and participatory Women's Health Campaign project for the Summer 2012.

IWPR is a non-profit organization that aims to help people in the world's most challenging environments to have the information they need to drive positive changes in their lives.

The RI will help the Health Campaign team in reviewing the literature and/or developing materials on issues related to women and health. We rely on our RI to make substantive and supportive contributions to our health campaign project on issues related to women's health. This is an online temporary (May to August 2012) position with excellent learning opportunities and $ 1200 honorarium. Review of the applications will begin immediately.

- Prepare annotated bibliography on identified topics related to women's health (i.e. breast cancer)
- Find global and/or local best practices on identified topics related to women's health
- Identify case studies on grassroots activism on women's health
- Conduct research on women's health issues in Muslim countries
- Assist in data analysis of the baseline needs assessment
- Compose charts, tables, and interpretation of data
- Develop updated fact-sheets based on collected information on women's health issues
- Develop health education materials.
- Provide general administrative program support as needed.

Requirements

The qualified candidate should be a graduate student in public health or related fields and

- Must demonstrate a strong knowledge base in feminist theory
- Exceptional research and analytical skills
- Operate independently with minimal supervision to fulfill the tasks
- Excellent writing and communication skills
- Professional work ethic
- Good organizational skills
