

DATE DOWNLOADED: Sat Apr 6 19:44:47 2024

SOURCE: Content Downloaded from HeinOnline

Citations:

Please note: citations are provided as a general guideline. Users should consult their preferred citation format's style manual for proper citation formatting.

Bluebook 21st ed.

Bobby Marzine Harges, Batson Challenges in Criminal Cases: After Snyder v. Louisiana, is Substantial Deference to the Trial Judge Still Required, 19 B.U. PUB. INT. L.J. 193 (2010).

ALWD 7th ed.

Bobby Marzine Harges, Batson Challenges in Criminal Cases: After Snyder v. Louisiana, is Substantial Deference to the Trial Judge Still Required, 19 B.U. Pub. Int. L.J. 193 (2010).

APA 7th ed.

Harges, Bobby Marzine. (2010). Batson challenges in criminal cases: after snyder v. louisiana, is substantial deference to the trial judge still required. Boston University Public interest Law Journal, 19(2), 193-224.

Chicago 17th ed.

Bobby Marzine Harges, "Batson Challenges in Criminal Cases: After Snyder v. Louisiana, is Substantial Deference to the Trial Judge Still Required," Boston University Public interest Law Journal 19, no. 2 (Spring 2010): 193-224

McGill Guide 9th ed.

Bobby Marzine Harges, "Batson Challenges in Criminal Cases: After Snyder v. Louisiana, is Substantial Deference to the Trial Judge Still Required" (2010) 19:2 BU Pub Int LJ 193.

AGLC 4th ed.

Bobby Marzine Harges, 'Batson Challenges in Criminal Cases: After Snyder v. Louisiana, is Substantial Deference to the Trial Judge Still Required' (2010) 19(2) Boston University Public interest Law Journal 193

MLA 9th ed.

Harges, Bobby Marzine. "Batson Challenges in Criminal Cases: After Snyder v. Louisiana, is Substantial Deference to the Trial Judge Still Required." Boston University Public interest Law Journal, vol. 19, no. 2, Spring 2010, pp. 193-224. HeinOnline.

OSCOLA 4th ed.

Bobby Marzine Harges, 'Batson Challenges in Criminal Cases: After Snyder v. Louisiana, is Substantial Deference to the Trial Judge Still Required' (2010) 19 BU Pub Int LJ 193
Please note: citations are provided as a general guideline. Users should consult their preferred citation format's style manual for proper citation formatting.

Provided by:

Fineman & Pappas Law Libraries

BATSON CHALLENGES IN CRIMINAL CASES: AFTER SNYDER V. LOUISIANA, IS SUBSTANTIAL
DEFERENCE TO THE TRIAL JUDGE STILL REQUIRED?

BOBBY MARZINE HARGES*

INTRODUCTION: APPLYING BATSON IN THE TWENTY-FIRST CENTURY

During jury selection, attorneys are asked to meet, evaluate, and make decisions about a number of individuals who will eventually decide the fate of their case. This “voir dire” process is complicated, time-consuming, and difficult because attorneys must make quick decisions with relatively little information. A lawyer may challenge jurors either for “cause” or through the use of a “peremptory” strike.¹ Attorneys exercise cause challenges when a prospective juror “lacks the qualifications required by law, cannot be impartial, is related to one of the parties or lawyers or is unable to accept the law given to him by the court.”² In contrast, attorneys exercise peremptory challenges for almost any reason.³ Because of this complicated and fast-paced process, lawyers usually base their decisions on gut reactions or hunches.⁴ While some potential jurors exhibit clear biases and should be struck for good cause, peremptory challenges have always allowed attorneys to strike jurors with more subtle bias which may not rise to the level of a “for cause strike.”⁵

Peremptory challenges, which have a long history in American jurisprudence, give attorneys a vehicle to act arbitrarily upon instinct or intuition. The use of peremptory challenges helps to ensure fairness in jury selection and to bolster respect for jury verdicts. However, the nature of peremptory challenges creates a conflict with modern constitutional jurisprudence. Peremptory challenges are by definition arbitrary and create a cloak for possible discrimina-

* Bobby Marzine Harges is the Adams & Reese Distinguished Professor of Law II at Loyola University New Orleans College of Law. Special thanks to Professor Andrea Armstrong for her comments on a prior draft of this article and to Eric Mund for his excellent research assistance.

¹ See Bobby Marzine Harges & Russell Jones, LOUISIANA EVIDENCE: PROBLEMS AND MATERIALS 5 (Harrison Co. ed., 4th ed. 2002).

² Id. (citing La. C.C.P. art. 1765 and La. C.Cr. P. art. 797).

³ See id.

⁴ See id.

⁵ See id. (“Such challenges are designed to allow lawyers to exclude potential jurors that they believe may be harmful to their case.”).

tion.⁶ The interplay between peremptory challenges and the Fourteenth Amendment to the Constitution has created a riddle: the courts must attempt to maintain a challenge that lawyers can exercise arbitrarily while simultaneously requesting a reason for the challenge.

The test announced by the United States Supreme Court in Batson v. Kentucky is currently the methodology the Court uses to balance these conflicting forces.⁷ However, over twenty years later, the Court is still explaining Batson's three-part test.⁸ Over time, the Court has both expanded and refined the principles set forth in Batson.⁹ It has become clear that eliminating discrimination in jury selection presents many unique obstacles.¹⁰

This article discusses how the recent Supreme Court decision, Snyder v. Louisiana, fits in with modern Batson jurisprudence. First, this article examines the landmark case of Batson v. Kentucky and its foundations. Second, this article considers how Batson has changed and expanded over the years. Specifically, this article canvasses the three-part Batson test to explain how it should be properly applied in jury selection for criminal cases. Finally, this article places Snyder v. Louisiana within the current Batson landscape.

I. BATSON: FOUNDATIONS AND EXPANSIONS

The Batson decision did not emerge fully formed in American jurisprudence; the original roots of Batson began with the passage of the Fourteenth Amendment, which provided all citizens with equal protection under the law.¹¹ This, in turn, began a judicial progression to remove all racial discrimination in jury selection. Understanding Batson requires an analysis of two types of cases. The first type of cases consists of those that laid the foundation for the Batson holding. The second type of cases includes those decided after Batson. This second group of cases expanded the ideals of Batson to other situations and described how to apply the Batson test properly.

A. Foundations

With the passage of the Fourteenth Amendment to the Constitution in ⁶ See BLACK'S LAW DICTIONARY (8th ed. 2004) (defining peremptory challenges as "challenges that do not need to be supported by a reason").

⁷ See Batson v. Kentucky, 476 U.S. 79, 96 (1986).

⁸ E.g., Snyder v. Louisiana, 552 U.S. 472 (2008).

⁹ E.g., J.E.B. v. Alabama, 511 U.S. 127 (1994) (expanding the Batson holding to challenges based on gender); Johnson v. California, 545 U.S. 162, 166–67 (2005) (defining how courts should apply step one of Batson).

¹⁰ See generally Sheri Lynn Johnson, Race and Recalcitrance: The Miller-El Remands, 5 OHIO ST. J. CRIM. L. 131 (2007); Brian W. Wais, Note, Actions Speak Louder Than Words: Revisions to the Batson Doctrine and Peremptory Challenges in the Wake Of Johnson v. California and Miller-El v. Dretke, 45 BRANDEIS L.J. 437 (2007).

¹¹ See U.S. CONST. amend. XIV.

1868,¹² the Supreme Court began the task of guaranteeing the rights granted by this new amendment.¹³ In Strauder v. West Virginia, the Supreme Court began looking at the Fourteenth Amendment in the context of jury selection.¹⁴ The Court dealt with the question of whether defendants have a right to a jury chosen free of racial discrimination.¹⁵ Using the recently passed Fourteenth Amendment, the Court found that the West Virginia law prohibiting jury service based on race was unconstitutional.¹⁶ The Court found that the specific purpose of the amendment was to protect the rights of the recently emancipated slaves by prohibiting state action violating those rights.¹⁷ The Court held that the state violated a defendant's rights when attorneys excluded members of his race from jury service.¹⁸ However, the Court was careful to point out that a defendant did not have the right to a jury that included members of his own race.¹⁹

Over fifty years later, the Court again examined the role of race in jury selection.²⁰ Straughter abolished laws prohibiting jury service based on race,²¹ but in Swain v. Alabama, the defendant argued that prosecutors were using peremptory strikes to effectively bar African-Americans from serving on juries.²² The Swain Court established a test allowing defendants to show that the state used peremptory strikes to systematically eliminate all African-American members of the venire.²³ The Court held that the defendant had the burden of showing that the prosecutor used peremptory strikes to exclude members of a particular race from jury service.²⁴ To demonstrate a violation, the defendant was required to show a systematic use of discrimination, not just in his case, but in multiple cases, in which the prosecution used peremptory challenges.²⁵ The defendant in Swain failed to meet this high burden of proof, and as time

¹² Id.

¹³ See Batson v. Kentucky, 476 U.S. 79, 82 (1986); see also Lawrence Elmen, Jr., Preemptory Challenges After Batson v. Kentucky: Equal Protection Under the Law or an Unequal Application of the Law, 20 NEW ENG. J. ON CRIM. & CIV. CONFINEMENT 481, 486 (1994).

¹⁴ Strauder v. West Virginia, 100 U.S. 303 (1880).

¹⁵ Id. at 305.

¹⁶ Id. at 310–12; see also Heather Davenport, Blinking Reality: Race and Criminal Jury Selection in Light of Ovalle, Miller-El, and Johnson, 58 BAYLOR L. REV. 949, 950–53 (2006) (giving a history of jury composition).

¹⁷ Strauder, 100 U.S. at 310–12.

¹⁸ Id. at 310.

¹⁹ Id. at 309.

²⁰ See Swain v. Alabama, 380 U.S. 202 (1965).

²¹ Strauder, 100 U.S. at 311.

²² Swain, 380 U.S. at 203.

²³ Id. at 223–24.

²⁴ Id. at 222–23.

²⁵ Id.

progressed, most defendants fell short of this high standard.²⁶

The Swain test proved onerous to the point of being unjust.²⁷ To correct this injustice, the Court reworked the test in Batson v. Kentucky.²⁸ This landmark case affirmed the ideals of Strauder but changed the test so a defendant had only to prove discrimination in his case.²⁹ In Batson, the prosecution struck all four of the African-American venire members on the jury panel.³⁰ The trial court overruled the objections to the preemptory strikes and empanelled an all white jury, which subsequently convicted the defendant.³¹ After the Kentucky Supreme Court denied Batson's appeal alleging his denial of equal protection under the Sixth and Fourteenth Amendments, the Supreme Court granted certiorari and fashioned a new test to govern preemptory challenges.³² While the test created in Batson was similar to the one in Swain, the Court greatly reduced the burden of proof on the defendant in Batson.³³

The Batson test has three parts. First, the defendant must make a prima facie showing that the prosecution's preemptory challenges are discriminatory.³⁴ To make this prima facie case, the defendant must show he is part of a "cognizable racial group" and that the prosecutor has used the preemptory strike against members of that racial group.³⁵ When making his argument, the defendant may reiterate that preemptory strikes essentially allow "those to discriminate who are of a mind to discriminate" while using the court as a medium for said discrimination.³⁶ Finally, the defendant must use these and any other "relevant circumstances" to create an inference that the prosecutor struck the venire member because of his race.³⁷

Second, the state must tender a nonracial reason for the strike.³⁸ This nonracial reason must be clearly articulated and be more than an assertion that the ²⁶ See id. at 224; see Batson v. Kentucky, 476 U.S. 79, 92-93 (1986).

²⁷ See Batson, 476 U.S. at 92-93.

²⁸ See id.; see also Bobby Marzine Harges, Peremptory Challenges in Jury Selection in Louisiana—When a "Gut Feeling" Is Not Enough, 54 LOY. L. REV. 95, 96-99 (2008).

²⁹ Batson, 476 U.S. at 93-94.

³⁰ Id. at 82-83.

³¹ Id. at 92-93.

³² Id. at 84.

³³ See id. at 96.

³⁴ Id.

³⁵ Id.

³⁶ Id.

³⁷ Id.

³⁸ Id. Often the movement to step two is referred to as a "burden shift" because once the prima facie case is made the burden shifts to the State to show a nonracial reason for the strike. It is, however, important to remember that the ultimate burden of proof lies with the defendant who made the Batson challenge. See Johnson v. California, 545 U.S. 162, 167 (2005) (citing Purkett v. Elem, 514 U.S. 765, 768 (1995)).

strike was not motivated by discrimination.³⁹ The nonracial reason need not rise to the level of a “for cause strike,” but must include a specific race-neutral reason for the strike.⁴⁰ Third, the judge must decide whether the “defendant has established purposeful discrimination.”⁴¹

The majority in Batson attempted to reconcile two opposing legal principles. On one hand, the peremptory challenge is designed to allow parties to strike potential jurors for any reason in order to ensure that each defendant receives a fair trial.⁴² On the other hand, notwithstanding the importance of the peremptory challenge to our criminal justice system, the Court recognized the fact that peremptory strikes can be vehicles for discrimination.⁴³ The Batson decision attempted to place a limit on this unlimited power to strike.⁴⁴ The Court conceded that peremptory challenges lend to the fairness of jury trials, but found that the limitation placed on the strikes does not render the strikes useless.⁴⁵

The concurrence by Justice Marshall dismissed the majority’s centrist approach and recommended abolishing peremptory strikes.⁴⁶ Justice Marshall remarked that peremptory strikes provide the potential for discriminatory practices in opposition to the Constitution and must be abolished.⁴⁷ He did not believe that a Supreme Court decision would stop prosecutors from discriminating during jury selection.⁴⁸

B. Expansion of Batson to Other Factual Situations

1. Powers v. Ohio: The Court Expands Batson to Allow Cross-Racial Objections

In subsequent decisions, the Supreme Court expanded the Batson holding to factual scenarios different from those in the Batson case. In Powers v. Ohio, decided in 1991, the Court considered whether the Batson holding extended to cases where the defendant and the challenged juror are not of the same race.⁴⁹ The white defendant in Powers was charged with aggravated murder.⁵⁰ At trial, the prosecution used seven of the ten peremptory strikes on African-Ameri-

³⁹ Batson, 476 U.S. at 97.

⁴⁰ Id.

⁴¹ Id. at 98.

⁴² See id. at 89.

⁴³ Id. at 89. (“[T]he State’s privilege to strike individual jurors through peremptory challenges, is subject to the commands of the Equal Protection Clause.”).

⁴⁴ See id. at 98–99.

⁴⁵ Id.

⁴⁶ Id. at 102–09 (Marshall, J., concurring).

⁴⁷ Id. at 102–03 (Marshall, J., concurring).

⁴⁸ Id. at 105 (Marshall, J., concurring).

⁴⁹ Powers v. Ohio, 499 U.S. 400 (1991); see also Harges, supra note 28 at 100–02.

⁵⁰ Powers, 499 U.S. at 402.

can jurors.⁵¹ Although the defendant objected to the strikes, the objections were overruled and he was subsequently convicted.⁵² The conviction was affirmed on appeal to the Court of Appeals and the Ohio Supreme Court dismissed the appeal.⁵³ The United States Supreme Court granted certiorari to decide whether a lawyer could raise a Batson challenge when the defendant and challenged venire member are not of the same race.⁵⁴

The State of Ohio argued that Batson should be limited to its facts and that objections to peremptory challenges should be allowed only where the defendant and venire person are of the same race.⁵⁵ The Court dismissed this argument, noting that Batson was meant to “serve multiple ends” by protecting defendants, jurors, and the community at large.⁵⁶ Specifically, the Court held that venire persons have a right not to be struck from the jury because of their race.⁵⁷ While venire persons do not have the specific right to serve on a jury, they are, nevertheless, not to be excluded based on race.⁵⁸ Ohio also advanced the argument that the “raw fact” of race is a legitimate way to decide a venire member’s fitness because it lacks any “particular stigma or dishonor.”⁵⁹ Ohio claimed that because all races are potentially subject to race-based strikes, no equal protection challenge existed.⁶⁰ The Court dismissed this argument by pointing out that “racial classification” is the flaw and anything that includes a racial label has no place in a modern court.⁶¹

While the struck venire members had an equal protection claim, the problem is that Powers, the defendant, was the party advancing the interest.⁶² The Court granted third-party standing based on three criteria.⁶³ First, the defendant must show an actual injury to himself due to the issue in dispute.⁶⁴ Second, the defendant must show a “close relationship to the third party,” so that he is a sufficient advocate.⁶⁵ Finally, the defendant must show that there is “some hindrance to the third party’s ability to protect his or her own interests.”⁶⁶

In applying these criteria, the Court found that a criminal defendant satisfies

⁵¹ Id. at 403.

⁵² Id.

⁵³ Id.

⁵⁴ Id. at 403–04.

⁵⁵ Id. at 406.

⁵⁶ Id.

⁵⁷ Id. at 406–07.

⁵⁸ Id. at 407.

⁵⁹ Id. at 410.

⁶⁰ Id.

⁶¹ Id.

⁶² See id.

⁶³ Id. at 410–11 (citing to Singleton v. Wulff, 428 U.S. 106 (1976)).

⁶⁴ Id. at 411.

⁶⁵ Id.

⁶⁶ Id.

the criteria for third-party standing when a venire member is struck based on race.⁶⁷ First, the Court found that a defendant is harmed when a venire member is struck based on race.⁶⁸ The harm to the defendant arises from the doubt the discriminatory strike places on all of the subsequent proceedings.⁶⁹ The defendant is harmed by the race-based strike that may lead to a tainted trial.⁷⁰ Second, the Court found that criminal defendants and venire members have a common interest in eliminating racial discrimination from the courtroom.⁷¹ Finally, the Court enumerated the barriers to venire members when trying to assert their own rights during voir dire.⁷² Venire members have no access to relief at the time of the trial and have a limited financial incentive to pursue litigation.⁷³ Moreover, it is difficult for an excluded venire member to show a likelihood that discrimination against him during jury selection will occur.⁷⁴ Given these barriers, the Court found that a struck venire member is unable to advance his own interests.⁷⁵

2. Edmonson v. Leesville Concrete Co.: The Court Expands Batson to Civil Proceedings

The next expansion of Batson also came in 1991 when the Supreme Court applied the Batson holding to civil cases. In Edmonson v. Leesville Concrete Co.,⁷⁶ the Court found that parties in civil litigation also have a right to be free from discrimination during jury selection.⁷⁷ Edmonson sued Leesville Concrete for negligence.⁷⁸ During the trial, Leesville used two of its peremptory strikes against three potential African-American jurors.⁷⁹ When Edmonson objected to the strikes under Batson, the court overruled the challenge.⁸⁰ The trial judge agreed with Leesville's arguments that Batson applied only to criminal cases.⁸¹ On appeal, the Fifth Circuit ultimately affirmed the decision,⁸² which

⁶⁷ Id.

⁶⁸ Id.

⁶⁹ Id. at 412 (finding that a race-based peremptory challenge "casts doubt over the obligation of the parties, the jury and indeed the court to adhere to the law throughout the trial of the case").

⁷⁰ Id. at 411.

⁷¹ Id. at 413-14.

⁷² Id. at 414-15.

⁷³ Id.

⁷⁴ Id. at 415.

⁷⁵ Id. ("[D]efendant[s] in a criminal case can raise the third-party equal protection claims of jurors excluded . . .").

⁷⁶ 500 U.S. 614 (1991); see also Harges, supra note 28, at 102-03.

⁷⁷ Edmonson, 500 U.S. at 628.

⁷⁸ Id. at 616.

⁷⁹ Id.

⁸⁰ Id. at 616-17.

⁸¹ Id. at 617.

the Supreme Court agreed to review.⁸³

The Court disagreed with Leesville's argument that only the state was bound by the Equal Protection Clause and that Batson should not be applied because the state was not a party in this civil litigation. The Court found that the litigation was so dominated by governmental authority that the litigants were bound by the constitutional principle of equal protection.⁸⁴ The Court also applied the Powers holding, finding that civil litigants have standing to bring an Equal Protection claim on behalf of the improperly struck juror.⁸⁵ The Court highlighted that in both criminal and civil matters, it is in the interest of the litigants and the judicial process to rid the courtroom of racial discrimination.⁸⁶ Ultimately, the Court extended the Batson holdings and procedures to encompass both civil and criminal proceedings.⁸⁷

3. Georgia v. McCollum: The Court Expands Batson to Prohibit Discrimination by a Criminal Defendant

A year after the decision in Edmonson v. Leesville Concrete Co., the Court held in Georgia v. McCollum that Batson also prohibited discriminatory peremptory strikes by a criminal defendant.⁸⁸ In this case, several white defendants were on trial for assaulting two African-American victims.⁸⁹ Before jury selection began, because of the defendant's intention to use peremptory strikes in a racially discriminatory manner, the prosecution sought an order allowing a Batson challenge if the defendants used peremptory strikes to dismiss potential African-American jurors.⁹⁰ The trial court denied the motion but certified it for immediate appeal to the Supreme Court of Georgia.⁹¹ The Supreme Court of Georgia also denied the motion, and the United States Supreme Court granted certiorari to decide whether a criminal defendant can make racially motivated peremptory challenges.⁹²

The Court began by discussing the harm to jurors, the court, and the community when racially motivated peremptory challenges are allowed.⁹³ The Court next considered whether the harm is caused by a state actor.⁹⁴ The Court ex-

⁸² Id. The Court of Appeals initially reversed and remanded, but then ordered a rehearing en banc and affirmed the district court. Id.

⁸³ Id. at 618.

⁸⁴ Id. at 619–20 (citing Moose Lodge No. 107 v. Irvis, 407 U.S. 163, 172 (1972)).

⁸⁵ Id. at 629–30 (citing Powers v. Ohio, 499 U.S. 400, 629–30 (1991)).

⁸⁶ Id. at 630.

⁸⁷ See id.

⁸⁸ Georgia v. McCollum, 505 U.S. 42 (1992).

⁸⁹ Id. at 44.

⁹⁰ Id. at 44–45.

⁹¹ Id. at 45.

⁹² Id. at 45–46.

⁹³ Id. at 48–50.

⁹⁴ Id. at 50–51.

amined the logic in Edmonson and found that because the state grants a criminal defendant the right to use peremptory challenges, he becomes a state actor.⁹⁵ As the defendant exercises his peremptory challenges, the state further facilitates the process by dismissing the venire member.⁹⁶ The Court concluded that a criminal defendant is a state actor for purposes of applying equal protection.⁹⁷

The Court next considered whether the state had standing to question the peremptory challenge.⁹⁸ Here, the Court followed the logic in Powers and Edmonson to find that the state had standing to represent the excluded venire member.⁹⁹ The Court cited the injury to the state when the judicial process is tainted by discrimination, the state's relationship to the potential jurors, and the barriers that the dismissed venire members would face in bringing suit on their own.¹⁰⁰ The Court found that the relationship between the state and the potential juror is closer than the relationships it approved in Powers and Edmonson.¹⁰¹ Moreover, as the representatives of all its citizens, the state is the most appropriate party to assert the violation of the constitutional rights of the excluded jurors in a criminal trial.¹⁰²

Finally, the Court considered the rights of criminal defendants compared to the rights provided in Batson.¹⁰³ The Court began by reaffirming that peremptory challenges are not a required element of due process, but have long been maintained as an additional element of fairness in our jury system.¹⁰⁴ The Court found that given the Fourteenth Amendment's constitutional mandate to eliminate discrimination from the courtroom, peremptory challenges based on racial discrimination cannot stand.¹⁰⁵ Additionally, the Court found that the Batson requirements do not violate the defendant's Sixth Amendment right to effective counsel or trial by jury.¹⁰⁶ Ultimately, the Court held that any peremptory challenge based on race cannot stand, regardless of the party who ⁹⁵ Id. (citing Edmonson v. Leesville Concrete Co., 500 U.S. 614, 620 (1991)).

⁹⁶ See id. at 52.

⁹⁷ Id. at 53 ("Regardless of who precipitated the jurors' removal, the perception and the reality in a criminal trial will be that the court has excused jurors based on race . . .").

⁹⁸ Id. at 55-56.

⁹⁹ Id.; Powers v. Ohio, 499 U.S. 400 (1991); Edmonson v. Leesville Concrete Co., 500 U.S. 614 (1991).

¹⁰⁰ McCullum, 505 U.S. at 56.

¹⁰¹ Id.

¹⁰² Id.

¹⁰³ Id. at 57; Batson v. Kentucky, 476 U.S. 79 (1986).

¹⁰⁴ McCullum, 505 U.S. at 57 ("[I]t is important to recall that peremptory challenges are not constitutionally protected fundamental rights; rather, they are but one state-created means to the constitutional end of an impartial jury and a fair trial.").

¹⁰⁵ Id.

¹⁰⁶ Id. at 58.

brought the challenge.¹⁰⁷

4. J.E.B. v. Alabama: The Court Expands Batson to Prohibit Discrimination Based on Gender

In J.E.B. v. Alabama, decided in 1994, the Court considered whether peremptory strikes based on gender can be challenged under Batson.¹⁰⁸ During a paternity suit, Alabama used nine peremptory strikes to strike males from the potential jury, resulting in an entirely female jury.¹⁰⁹ The defendant objected, claiming that Batson prohibits strikes of a discriminatory nature whether based on gender or race.¹¹⁰ The trial court denied the defendant's claim and found that the defendant was the child's father.¹¹¹ The state appeals court affirmed the decision and the Alabama Supreme Court declined to hear the case.¹¹² The United States Supreme Court granted certiorari and found that the Equal Protection Clause prohibits peremptory strikes based on gender.¹¹³

The Court dismissed the State's arguments that men are more inclined to agree with the male defendant, refusing to accept a justification based on stereotypes that the Court sought to avoid.¹¹⁴ The Court traced the exclusion of women from juries back to eighteenth-century England and found that women have historically been excluded from jury service.¹¹⁵ The Court cited the harm to both the litigants and the legal system when discrimination of any type is allowed to prevail¹¹⁶ and found that strikes based on gender, like strikes based on race, have no place in the courtroom.¹¹⁷

5. United States v. Martinez-Salazar: The Court Expands Batson to Prohibit Discrimination Based on Ethnic Origin

In 2000, the Court decided United States v. Martinez-Salazar, in which a venire person who should have been struck for cause was seated on the jury despite the defendant's objections, forcing the defense to use a peremptory challenge.¹¹⁸ The defendant, Martinez-Salazar, was tried for a number of nar-

¹⁰⁷ Id. at 59.

¹⁰⁸ J.E.B. v. Alabama, 511 U.S. 127 (1994); see also Harges, supra note 28, at 103.

¹⁰⁹ J.E.B., 511 U.S. at 129.

¹¹⁰ Id.

¹¹¹ Id.

¹¹² Id. at 129–30.

¹¹³ Id. at 130–31.

¹¹⁴ Id. at 140 (“Discrimination in jury selection, whether based on race or on gender, causes harm to the litigants, the community, and the individual jurors who are wrongfully excluded from participation in the judicial process.”).

¹¹⁵ Id. at 132.

¹¹⁶ Id. at 140.

¹¹⁷ Id. at 146.

¹¹⁸ United States v. Martinez-Salazar, 528 U.S. 304 (2000); see also Harges, supra note 28, at 104–05.

cotics and weapons offenses.¹¹⁹ A potential juror indicated in a preliminary questionnaire that he would favor the prosecution.¹²⁰ However, the court refused to reject the juror for cause, forcing the defense to use a peremptory challenge to excuse the juror.¹²¹ The defendant was subsequently convicted, and Martinez-Salazar appealed based on the failure of the trial court to excuse the juror for cause.¹²² On appeal, the Ninth Circuit found a due process violation because the defendant was required to use a peremptory challenge to strike the prospective juror.¹²³ The Supreme Court granted certiorari and reversed, finding that because the prospective juror did not actually serve on the jury, there was no due process violation.¹²⁴

The defendant claimed that having to use a peremptory challenge on a potential juror who should have been struck for cause was a violation of due process.¹²⁵ The Court concluded that the peremptory challenge worked as designed; the defendant was able to strike the biased juror and receive a fair trial.¹²⁶ While discussing peremptory strikes, the Court found that challenges to a peremptory strike are only viable when the strike discriminates based on "the juror's gender, ethnic origin, or race."¹²⁷

It is the Court's mention of ethnic origin in its dicta that is significant in this case. This was the first time the Court specifically stated that Batson also applied to strikes motivated by ethnic origin.¹²⁸ The Court cited Hernandez for this proposition, but in Hernandez the Court never specifically stated whether Batson applies to peremptory challenges motivated by ethnic origin.¹²⁹ It appears from this dicta and references to Hernandez that the Court is considering extending a party's ability to challenge peremptory strikes to those motivated by ethnic origin. However, as ethnic origin is merely referenced in Hernandez and appears in the dicta of Martinez-Salazar, the controlling nature of a challenge based on ethnic origin is unclear.

II. BATSON V. KENTUCKY: THE TEST APPLIED

While one set of cases expands the Batson test to encompass more factual

¹¹⁹ Martinez-Salazar, 528 U.S. at 308.

¹²⁰ Id.

¹²¹ Id. at 309.

¹²² Id.

¹²³ Id. at 310.

¹²⁴ Id. at 310–11.

¹²⁵ Id. at 309–10.

¹²⁶ Id. at 313–14.

¹²⁷ Id. at 315.

¹²⁸ Id. at 315 ("Under the Equal Protection Clause, a defendant may not exercise a peremptory challenge to remove a potential juror solely on the basis of the juror's gender, ethnic origin, or race" (citing to Hernandez v. New York, 500 U.S. 352 (1991) (emphasis added))).

¹²⁹ Id.; see Hernandez, 500 U.S.

situations, a second set of cases explains how to administer the test. The mandate of Batson (eliminating discriminatory peremptory strikes) is clear, but it is often difficult to execute. Attempting to decide when a peremptory challenge is motivated by discrimination is a difficult process, and the Supreme Court has given surprisingly little guidance. Prior to Snyder v. Louisiana,¹³⁰ there were four major cases that examined how the Batson test should be applied: Hernandez v. New York,¹³¹ Purkett v. Elem,¹³² Johnson v. California,¹³³ and Miller-El v. Dretke.¹³⁴ Understanding how these cases work together can be difficult, particularly when taking into account the timeline. After the Court decided Hernandez and Purkett, in 1991 and 1995, respectively, scholars viewed the cases together as a movement away from the ideals of Batson.¹³⁵ A more complete picture did not emerge until 2005, when the Court decided Johnson and Miller-El.¹³⁶ Hernandez and Purkett can be read as a step away from Batson, which the Court corrected in the Miller-El and Johnson decisions. On the other hand, all four can be read to fit together and describe the three steps of the Batson test. The descriptions here examine each case as it applies to a particular step in the Batson test.

A. Johnson v. California: Analyzing Step One of the Batson Test

In Johnson v. California, the Court held that step one of the Batson inquiry requires only an inference of discrimination.¹³⁷ In Johnson, an African-American defendant was accused of assaulting and murdering a white child.¹³⁸ During the trial, the prosecutor struck all three of the African-American venire persons eligible to serve on the jury.¹³⁹ The defense objected to the prosecu-

¹³⁰ 552 U.S. 472 (2008).

¹³¹ 500 U.S. 352 (1991) (plurality opinion).

¹³² 514 U.S. 765, 766 (1995).

¹³³ 545 U.S. 162 (2005).

¹³⁴ 545 U.S. 231 (2005).

¹³⁵ See, e.g., Michelle Mahony, Note, The Future Viability of Batson v. Kentucky and the Practical Implications of Purkett v. Elem, 16 REV. LITIG. 137, 169 (1997) (stating that the Purkett holding reduces Batson to a "mere formality"); D. John Neese, Jr., Note, Purkett v. Elem: Resuscitating the Nondiscriminatory Hunch, 33 HOUS. L. REV. 1267 (1996) (describing Purkett as restoring integrity to peremptory challenges); see also Jason Hendren, Note, Criminal Procedure—Peremptory Challenges After Purkett v. Elem, 115 S. Ct. 1796 (1995): How to Judge a Book by its Cover Without Violating Equal Protection, 19 U. ARK. LITTLE ROCK L.J. 249 (1997); Jason Laeser, Case Note, Jurors and Litigants Beware—Savvy Attorneys are Prepared to Strike: Has Purkett v. Elem Signaled the Demise of the Peremptory Challenge at the Federal and State Levels?, 52 U. MIAMI L. REV. 635 (1998).

¹³⁶ Johnson, 545 U.S. at 162; Miller-El, 545 U.S. at 231.

¹³⁷ Johnson, 545 U.S. at 172–73.

¹³⁸ Id. at 164.

¹³⁹ Id.

tion's strikes, but the trial judge overruled each objection.¹⁴⁰ The judge found that the strikes bordered on a Batson violation but did not warrant the objection because the defendant had not shown a "strong likelihood" of discrimination.¹⁴¹ Upon review, the California Supreme Court pointed out that Batson allows state courts to determine how to evaluate the prima facie case in step one.¹⁴² The court agreed that the "strong likelihood" standard applied by the trial court is the correct standard according to California case law.¹⁴³ The court concluded that while the "strong likelihood" standard was a "substantial" burden, it was not an "onerous" burden, and so it fit within Batson.¹⁴⁴ After finding that the trial court had used the correct standard, the California Supreme Court deferred to the trial judge's decision and upheld the conviction.¹⁴⁵ The United States Supreme Court granted certiorari and held that to fulfill step one in Batson, a defendant need only present enough evidence to create an inference of discrimination.¹⁴⁶

The Court found that raising the standard of step one (i.e., to a "strong likelihood" standard) would place a higher burden on the defendant than Batson intended.¹⁴⁷ The Court designed the Batson framework to bring out as much information as possible in order to minimize uncertainty and speculation.¹⁴⁸ The Johnson Court highlighted the difficulty of knowing with certainty whether the strike is discriminatory.¹⁴⁹ Instead of speculating about why the strike might have been made, the party who made the strike is required to explain it.¹⁵⁰ Raising the standard in step one would require the court to evaluate step one without all the information.¹⁵¹ The Court argued that Batson was designed to provide as much information as possible for the judge to decide whether the strike was discriminatory.¹⁵² While the ultimate burden of persuasion is on the ¹⁴⁰ Id. at 165.

¹⁴¹ Id. (citing People v. Johnson, 30 Cal. 4th 1302, 1307 (2003)) (emphasis removed). Under the California case of People v. Wheeler, a judge is required to find a strong likelihood that the peremptory challenge was discriminatory before proceeding to step two of the Batson analyst. People v. Wheeler, 583 P.2d 748 (1978).

¹⁴² Johnson, 545 U.S. at 166. Specifically, the California Supreme Court found that the states are tasked with evaluating the standards for a Batson challenge and that the Wheeler "strong likelihood" standard fit within the Batson holding. Wheeler, 583 P.2d.

¹⁴³ Johnson, 545 U.S. at 166–67.

¹⁴⁴ Id. at 167.

¹⁴⁵ Id.

¹⁴⁶ Id. at 169 (emphasis added).

¹⁴⁷ Id. at 170.

¹⁴⁸ Id. at 172.

¹⁴⁹ Id.

¹⁵⁰ Id. ("The Batson framework is designed to produce actual answers to suspicions and inferences that discrimination may have infected the jury selection process.")

¹⁵¹ Id. at 170.

¹⁵² Id. at 171.

party making the Batson challenge, steps one and two are designed to maximize the amount of information the judge has to consider in step three.¹⁵³ If the requirement of proof in step one is too high, Batson cannot bring "actual answers to suspicions and inferences that discrimination may have infected the jury selection."¹⁵⁴ In order to expose this possible infection, the Court found that step one of the Batson inquiry required only an inference of discrimination.¹⁵⁵

B. Purkett v. Elem and Hernandez v. New York: Analyzing Step Two of the Batson Test

In the per curiam decision in Purkett v. Elem, the Court focused on step two of the Batson test.¹⁵⁶ The criminal defendant in Purkett made a Batson challenge when the prosecution struck two African-American men from the jury panel.¹⁵⁷ The prosecutor responded that the two strikes were made because the men had long unkempt hair and facial hair.¹⁵⁸ The trial judge denied the challenge and the defendant was convicted.¹⁵⁹ After conviction, the defendant sought a writ of habeas corpus in federal court.¹⁶⁰ While the Court of Appeals for the Eighth Circuit found a Batson violation, the Supreme Court reversed the circuit court and confirmed the state court conviction.¹⁶¹

In the opinion, the Supreme Court faulted the circuit court for focusing on the reasonableness of the nonracial reason in step two, rather than in step three.¹⁶² The Court stated that step two's only requirement is an offering of a race neutral justification for the strike.¹⁶³ As long as the strike was not discriminatory, it did not matter whether it was sensible or plausible.¹⁶⁴ The court does not consider whether the inference of discrimination holds up against the non-racial reason until step three.¹⁶⁵ The Purkett Court found that facial hair is not race-specific, so the analysis should have continued to step three.¹⁶⁶ After deferring to the lower court's finding in step three, the Court upheld the conviction.

¹⁵³ Id. at 170-71.

¹⁵⁴ Id.

¹⁵⁵ Id. at 172-73. The holding in this case speaks only to step one; the party who makes the Batson challenge is still required to carry the ultimate burden beyond a preponderance of the evidence.

¹⁵⁶ Purkett v. Elem, 514 U.S. 765, 768 (1995).

¹⁵⁷ Id. at 766.

¹⁵⁸ Id.

¹⁵⁹ Id.

¹⁶⁰ Id. at 767.

¹⁶¹ Id. at 767, 769-70.

¹⁶² Id. at 768.

¹⁶³ Id.

¹⁶⁴ Id. at 768-69.

¹⁶⁵ Id. at 767.

¹⁶⁶ Id. at 769.

tion, finding that the trial court was correct in concluding that “the prosecutor was not motivated by discriminatory intent.”¹⁶⁷

The Court’s decision in Purkett restated the rule it announced earlier in Hernandez v. New York, where the Court, in a plurality decision, first suggested its retreat from the rigorous burden required of the prosecution in step two of the Batson test.¹⁶⁸ With reference to step two, the Court in Hernandez stated:

A neutral explanation in [step two] means an explanation based on something other than the race of the juror. At this step of the inquiry, the issue is the facial validity of the prosecutor’s explanation. Unless a discriminatory intent is inherent in the prosecutor’s explanation, the reason offered will be deemed race neutral.¹⁶⁹

This low threshold allowed parties free rein to exercise peremptory challenges based on race, gender, or any other kind of discrimination without fear that their peremptory challenges would be found discriminatory. This standard allowed virtually any facially neutral explanation to survive a Batson challenge regardless of how tenuous the explanation might be. Consequently, the standard articulated in Hernandez arguably allowed an improbable explanation to suffice even if it had no connection to the case.

The Purkett dissent viewed the majority decision as a reversal of the Batson ideals, stating that if any reason will satisfy step two, it will be difficult for the defendant to win the challenge.¹⁷⁰ The dissent argued that there was no way to evaluate the nonracial reason tendered in step two and, as a result, the prosecution is given a blank slate to manufacture any nonracial reason, no matter how unrelated or absurd.¹⁷¹ According to the dissent, the requirement is so minimal that it is really no different from saying, “I [have] a hunch.”¹⁷² The dissent argued that the nonracial reason should require some relation to the case.¹⁷³ The dissent pointed to the logic in Hernandez, showing how the nonracial reason should relate to the case.¹⁷⁴ Depending on the facts of the case, a dubious nonracial reason in one case might, under different circumstances, be completely proper and survive a Batson challenge.¹⁷⁵ By requiring a stronger connec-

¹⁶⁷ Id. at 769–70.

¹⁶⁸ Hernandez v. New York, 500 U.S. 352 (1991).

¹⁶⁹ Id. at 360.

¹⁷⁰ Purkett, 514 U.S. at 775 (Stevens, J., dissenting).

¹⁷¹ Id.

¹⁷² Id.

¹⁷³ Id.

¹⁷⁴ Id. at 773–74 (citing Hernandez, 500 U.S. at 352). In Hernandez, the prosecution struck all Spanish speaking jurors. The prosecution stated the strikes were made out of a concern that Spanish speaking jurors might not trust the prosecution’s translators. While such strikes would normally be considered discriminatory, the court found that because of the substantial amount of translated testimony the strikes were valid. The court also warned that similar strikes under different circumstances may not be valid.

¹⁷⁵ Id. at 775.

tion, there is less chance for a manufactured nonracial reason. Without a requirement of a minimal relation to the case at hand, a prosecutor could use any reason that is not openly discriminatory to rebut a Batson challenge.¹⁷⁶ The dissent argued that the majority's ruling was not in the spirit of Batson and significantly weakened the defendant's chances under a Batson challenge.¹⁷⁷

The Purkett dissent made a persuasive argument. If a prosecutor is allowed to satisfy step two of the Batson test by articulating any race-neutral reason, even one that is not related to the facts of the case, the trial court will not be able to eliminate discrimination in jury selection. A skilled prosecutor with a desire to discriminate during jury selection may easily create race-neutral reasons to satisfy step two of the Batson analysis by articulating any of the plethora of available reasons unrelated to race.¹⁷⁸

Before the Court's decisions in Purkett and Hernandez, it was already difficult for the trial court to eliminate discrimination in jury selection. The lower standard articulated by the Court in Hernandez and Purkett for step two of the Batson test actually made it easier for a prosecutor to discriminate against prospective jurors during voir dire than it had been prior to the decisions. Courts have not found it easy to establish "a legal test that will objectively measure the inherently subjective reasons that underlie use of a peremptory challenge."¹⁷⁹ Because a prosecutor usually bases a peremptory challenge on a gut reaction, experience, or intuition, it is often difficult for prosecutors exercising peremptory challenges to articulate their precise reasons for doing so when allegations are made that they have discriminated against prospective jurors during jury selection. When that fact is coupled with the reality that any race-neutral reason articulated by the prosecutor will satisfy step two of the Batson test, the trial court's ability to eradicate discrimination in jury selection becomes even more difficult. The Court's decision in Miller-El v. Dretke may have given trial courts more guidance in their efforts to eradicate discrimination in jury selection.¹⁸⁰

C. Miller-El v. Dretke: Analyzing Step Three of the Batson Test

While Hernandez v. New York and *Purkett v. Elem*¹⁸¹ can be viewed as a retreat from the ideals of the Batson decision, Miller-El v. Dretke can be seen as a step toward a reaffirmation of the Batson principles.¹⁸² Miller-El came to trial before Batson was decided, but the Supreme Court did not reach a deci-¹⁷⁶ Id.

¹⁷⁷ Id.

¹⁷⁸ See id. at 769, where the Court found that the prosecutor's argument that "facial hair . . . mustaches and . . . beards look suspicious" satisfied step two of the Batson test.

¹⁷⁹ Miller-El v. Dretke, 545 U.S. 231, 267 (2005) (Breyer, J., concurring).

¹⁸⁰ See id. at 241.

¹⁸¹ Hernandez v. New York, 500 U.S. 352 (1991); Purkett v. Elem, 514 U.S. 765 (1991).

¹⁸² Miller-El, 545 U.S. at 241.

sion until 2005.¹⁸³ The case involved a defendant charged with murder in Texas.¹⁸⁴ During voir dire, the prosecution struck ten of the African-American venire persons.¹⁸⁵ After the conviction, the defense appealed under Swain,¹⁸⁶ but the Court sent the case back to the trial court after Batson was decided.¹⁸⁷ The trial court affirmed the original decision despite Batson, and the appeals process began again.¹⁸⁸ After a Texas state court affirmed the conviction, the defendant sought a writ of habeas corpus in federal court.¹⁸⁹ After a series of appeals and remands, the Supreme Court granted certiorari and ruled in favor of the defendant.¹⁹⁰ In the Miller-El opinion, the Court spent little time debating the jurisprudence, but instead reviewed the entire trial record to conclude that the peremptory strikes violated the precedent in Batson.¹⁹¹

Miller-El instructed trial courts to look at “all relevant circumstances.”¹⁹² The Court skipped over any abstract discussion and instead presented a primer on how to analyze a Batson challenge using the facts of Miller-El.¹⁹³ Justice Souter began by conducting a statistical analysis of the prosecutor’s peremptory challenges.¹⁹⁴ The prosecution used peremptory strikes to eliminate ninety-one percent of the African-American venire persons.¹⁹⁵ The Court looked extensively at side-by-side comparisons of various similarly situated venire persons.¹⁹⁶ Statistically, many of the individuals with similar characteristics re-

¹⁸³ Id. at 236–37. The case first entered the state system in 1985, but did not make a federal appeal until 2000. Miller-El v. Johnson, No. Civ. 3:96-CV-1992-H, 2000 WL 724534 (N.D. Tex. June 5, 2000).

¹⁸⁴ Miller-El, 545 U.S. at 236.

¹⁸⁵ Id. at 236, 240. The other nine in the pool were struck for cause or by agreement and one served. Id. at 240.

¹⁸⁶ See id. at 236 (citing Swain v. Alabama, 380 U.S. 202 (1965)).

¹⁸⁷ Id. at 236. Batson was decided in 1986. Batson v. Kentucky, 476 U.S. 79 (1986).

¹⁸⁸ Miller El, 545 U.S. at 236–37.

¹⁸⁹ Id. at 274 (Thomas, J., dissenting).

¹⁹⁰ Id. at 266. This decision is actually the second time the Supreme Court has dealt with Miller-El. The Court also granted certiorari after the Fifth Circuit denied review of the Batson claim. Miller-El v. Cockrell, 534 U.S. 1122, 1122 (2002) (granting certiorari so Fifth Circuit could review the Batson claim). After the Fifth Circuit reviewed and denied the Batson claim, the Supreme Court again granted certiorari, giving rise to the case analyzed here. Miller-El, 545 U.S. at 237.

¹⁹¹ See Miller-El, 545 U.S. at 279–80 (Thomas, J., dissenting). The Texas Supreme Court did not look at the entire record as it was presented to the United States Supreme Court. Instead, the Texas Supreme Court was only presented with the cards of the jurors who were struck and were not able to consider an argument based on comparative analysis. Id. at 279.

¹⁹² Id. at 240 (citing Batson, 476 U.S. at 96–97).

¹⁹³ Id. at 241.

¹⁹⁴ See id. at 240–41.

¹⁹⁵ Id.

¹⁹⁶ Id. at 241–53.

ceived different treatment because of their race.¹⁹⁷ The Court examined how the prosecutor spoke to and questioned members of different races.¹⁹⁸ Often the Court found that the prosecutor gave more provocative descriptions or harder questions to African-American members of the venire in an attempt to make them sound more undesirable.¹⁹⁹ Also, since the defendant originally appealed the decision under Swain, the Court reviewed evidence of past discriminatory peremptory challenges by the prosecution's office.²⁰⁰ The Court concluded that the race-neutral reasons presented by the prosecution were not consistent in light of the facts, and that the strikes were in fact discriminatory.²⁰¹ After considering all the facts, the majority opinion found that "it blinks reality" to say the strikes were not discriminatory.²⁰² Commenting on the prosecutor's reasons for exercising a peremptory challenge, the Court noted that "if the stated reason does not hold up, its pretextual significance does not fade because a trial judge, or an appeals court, can imagine a [legitimate unarticulated] reason" for exercising the challenge.²⁰³ As a result, the reasons stated by the prosecutor are very important at step three of the Batson analysis and should be scrutinized carefully by the trial or reviewing court.

From the Miller-El decision, a simple rule emerges. The Court takes the straightforward instruction from Batson to eliminate discrimination. The Johnson and Purkett holdings give the trial court the tools to bring out as much information as possible into the record. The trial court is then left with the task of deciding whether discrimination is the motive for the peremptory challenge. Miller-El gives courts permission to look at the entire record and to consider "all relevant circumstances" to determine whether the strikes have been discriminatory.²⁰⁴ Unfortunately, even after close scrutiny of all the facts, this decision can still be a difficult one.

In addition to giving an example of how to evaluate a Batson challenge, the Miller-El decision also acted to tie together the Batson progeny. As the Supreme Court handed down decisions concerning the application of Batson, lower courts initially interpreted these opinions as stand-alone cases. Hernandez v. New York and Purkett v. Elem were the two major cases interpreting Batson until 2005, when the Supreme Court handed down both Johnson and Miller-El.²⁰⁵ Considering Hernandez and Purkett alone, both decisions denied the ¹⁹⁷ Id.

¹⁹⁸ Id. at 253–63.

¹⁹⁹ Id.

²⁰⁰ Id. at 263–64.

²⁰¹ Id. at 265.

²⁰² Id. at 266.

²⁰³ Id. at 252.

²⁰⁴ Id. at 240 (citing Batson v. Kentucky, 476 U.S. 79, 96–97 (1986)).

²⁰⁵ Hernandez v. New York, 500 U.S. 352, 360 (1991) (stating that in step two of the Batson inquiry, the issue is simply the "facial validity of the prosecutor's explanation. Unless a discriminatory intent is inherent in the prosecutor's explanation, the reason offered defendants' Batson challenges.²⁰⁶ At that time, commentators, as well as the dissent in Purkett, believed that decisions like Hernandez and Purkett were a shift away from the Batson ideals and a shift toward allowing liberal exercise of peremptory challenges.²⁰⁷ Whatever the Court's actual reasoning was in Hernandez and Purkett, the more recent decisions of Johnson and Miller-El indicate a shift back to a more constrained exercise of peremptory challenges.

In reading Hernandez, Purkett, Johnson, and Miller-El together, one could draw two different conclusions. First, the Court could have changed its position over the years. The Hernandez and Purkett decisions seem to contradict the original Batson holding and allow any nonracial reason to rebut the prima facie case.²⁰⁸ This view has led to the belief that the Miller-El decision reshaped the holdings of Hernandez and Purkett.²⁰⁹ Second, one could read the Miller-El decision to fit within the holding of Purkett. The only holding the Court made in Purkett was that any nonracial reason will satisfy the second step.²¹⁰ However, although many have read into Purkett that step three is necessarily satisfied by any non-racial reason, the Court makes little comment on this interpretation in the Miller-El decision.²¹¹ This is because Miller-El extrapolates on the importance of step three in assessing the validity of the race-neutral reason for the strike, therefore shifting the weight of the Batson test to step three, rather than step two. The majority opinion in Miller-El cited Purkett once in a small section discussing the amount of deference given to the trial court's determination that the "state race-neutral explanations were true."²¹² Meanwhile, the majority opinion in Miller-El made no reference to Hernandez.²¹³

The Hernandez, Purkett, Johnson, and Miller-El decisions in concert give a will be deemed race neutral"); see generally Purkett v. Elem, 514 U.S. 765 (1995) (stating that it is error for a reviewing court to combine Batson's second and third steps because it is at the third step that the trial court determines the persuasiveness of the justification given for the strike); supra notes 156–80 and accompanying text. The Hernandez decision, along with Purkett, weakened the Batson inquiry by allowing the trial court to accept almost any reason offered by the prosecution for exercising a peremptory challenge. Hernandez, 500 U.S. at 360.

²⁰⁶ E.g., Mahony, supra note 135, at 169 (stating that the Purkett holding "reduces Batson to a mere formality").

²⁰⁷ See generally Wais, supra note 10, at 445 (discussing what the writer calls the "retreat from Batson").

²⁰⁸ See generally Johnson, supra note 10.

²⁰⁹ See generally Wais, supra note 10.

²¹⁰ See Purkett v. Elem, 514 U.S. 765, 769 (1991).

²¹¹ In my opinion, it is likely the Court meant to have some effect on Purkett with statements such as "if any facially neutral reason sufficed to answer a Batson challenge, then Batson would not amount to much more than Swain." Miller-El v. Dretke, 545 U.S. 231, 240 (2004).

²¹² Id. at 240 (citing Purkett v. Elem, 514 U.S. 765, 769 (1995) (per curiam)).

²¹³ Only Justice Thomas, in a dissenting opinion, mentioned Hernandez for the proposi-comprehensive look at how to apply Batson. The Johnson holding did not establish what it takes to make a successful Batson challenge, but what it takes to satisfy the first step.²¹⁴ Similarly, Hernandez and Purkett speak only to what is acceptable in step two of the Batson test and not how to evaluate the evidence in step three.²¹⁵ Finally, Miller-El instructs courts to “consider all relevant circumstances” in step three to make a final decision in evaluating the Batson challenge.²¹⁶ Together these cases work in conjunction to explain each step of a Batson challenge.

III. SNYDER v. LOUISIANA: THE COURT ELABORATES ON STEP THREE OF THE BATSON ANALYSIS

In Snyder v. Louisiana, the Court conducted a fact-intensive analysis of the prosecutor’s proffered reasons for excluding an African-American prospective juror during jury selection and found that the prosecution’s exercise of a peremptory strike was simply a pretext for racial discrimination.²¹⁷ The state charged Allen Snyder, an African-American defendant, with first-degree murder, a capital crime in Louisiana, for attacking his estranged wife, Mary Snyder and her companion, Howard Wilson.²¹⁸ During the attack, Snyder allegedly killed Howard by inflicting nine knife wounds and seriously injured Mary by stabbing her a total of nineteen times.²¹⁹ The prosecutor sought the death penalty.²²⁰ During jury selection, the lawyers questioned eighty-five jurors, with thirty-six of those surviving challenges for cause.²²¹ Five of the thirty-six prospective jurors were African-American; the prosecutor eliminated those five prospective jurors through the use of peremptory challenges.²²² The court found Snyder guilty and sentenced him to death.²²³

On appeal, the Louisiana Supreme Court affirmed Snyder’s conviction, denying his Batson claim.²²⁴ Snyder petitioned the United States Supreme Court

tion that “a strong presumption of validity attaches to a trial court’s factual finding at Batson’s third step.” Id. at 284.

²¹⁴ See Johnson v. California, 545 U.S. 162, 170 (2005).

²¹⁵ See Purkett, 514 U.S. at 767–68; Hernandez v. New York, 500 U.S. 352, 360 (1991).

²¹⁶ Miller-El, 545 U.S. at 240 (citing Batson v. Kentucky, 476 U.S. 79, 96–97 (1986)).

²¹⁷ Snyder v. Louisiana, 552 U.S. 472, 485 (2008).

²¹⁸ Id. at 474.

²¹⁹ State v. Snyder, 750 So. 2d 832, 836 (La. 1999).

²²⁰ Snyder, 552 U.S. at 475.

²²¹ Id.

²²² Id. at 475–76.

²²³ Id.

²²⁴ State v. Snyder, 750 So. 2d at 836. “On direct appeal, the Louisiana Supreme Court [initially] conditionally affirmed the conviction,” rejecting Snyder’s Batson claim, but remanded the case for a nunc pro tunc determination of his competency to stand trial. State v. Snyder, 942 So. 2d 484, 486 (La. 2006). On remand, the lower court found Snyder competent to stand trial, and the Louisiana Supreme Court affirmed that determination. Id.

for a writ of certiorari.²²⁵ While his petition was pending, the Court decided Miller-El.²²⁶ The Court granted Snyder's petition, "vacated the judgment, and remanded the case to the Louisiana Supreme Court for further consideration in light of Miller-El."²²⁷ The Louisiana Supreme Court, on remand, again rejected Snyder's Batson claim.²²⁸ The U.S. Supreme Court again granted certiorari, reversed the judgment of the Louisiana Supreme Court, and remanded the case for further proceedings.²²⁹

In holding that the lower court erred in not finding a Batson violation, the U.S. Supreme Court conducted a detailed analysis of the voir dire proceedings and found that the trial court committed clear error in overruling Snyder's Batson objection with respect to one of the African-American jurors, Jeffrey Brooks.²³⁰ Brooks was a college senior attempting to fulfill his student teaching obligation.²³¹ When defense counsel made a Batson objection concerning the striking of Brooks, the prosecution offered two race-neutral reasons for the strike: Brooks' nervousness and his concern that the trial would interfere with his student-teaching obligation.²³² With respect to the first reason, Brooks' nervousness, the Court acknowledged that race-neutral reasons for peremptory challenges often involve a juror's demeanor such as nervousness and inattention.²³³ However, because the trial judge made no actual statement on the record concerning Brooks' demeanor or nervousness, the Court could not presume that the trial judge actually accepted the prosecutor's assertion that Brooks was nervous.²³⁴

Regarding the second reason proffered by the prosecution, Brooks' concern about his student-teaching obligation, the Court noted, "Brooks was one of more than fifty members of the venire who expressed concern that jury service would interfere with work, school, family, or other obligations."²³⁵ In responding to the Batson challenge, the prosecutor stated that he was apprehensive that Brooks might attempt to find the defendant guilty of a lesser-included offense instead of first degree murder in order to minimize his time away from student-

²²⁵ Snyder, 552 U.S. at 476.

²²⁶ Id.

²²⁷ Id.

²²⁸ Id.

²²⁹ Id.

²³⁰ Id. at 477–486.

²³¹ Id. at 477.

²³² Id. at 478.

²³³ Id.; see also Leonard L. Cavise, The Batson Doctrine: The Supreme Court's Utter Failure to Meet the Challenge of Discrimination in Jury Selection, 1999 WIS. L. REV. 501, 534 (1999) (stating that the demeanor excuse is another useful and successful reason for exercising peremptory challenges).

²³⁴ Id. at 479.

²³⁵ Id. at 479–80.

teaching.²³⁶ A finding of guilt for a crime other than first-degree murder would eliminate the need for the penalty phase proceeding.²³⁷ The Court found this reasoning to be largely conjecture because even if Brooks favored a prompt resolution of the trial, that would not inevitably have led him to spurn a finding of first-degree murder.²³⁸

In rejecting the prosecution's proffered reasons for eliminating Brooks, the Court focused primarily on the prosecution's alleged concern that missing classes worried Brooks.²³⁹ The court dismissed this concern because, after the university dean informed Brooks that his jury service would not interfere with Brooks' student teaching obligations,²⁴⁰ Brooks no longer had concerns about any hardship brought about by his jury service.²⁴¹

According to the Court, the prosecution's second proffered justification was simply not credible because the prosecutor accepted white jurors who disclosed conflicting obligations that appeared to have been as serious, if not more serious, than Brooks'.²⁴² The Court singled out one white juror in particular, Ronald Laws, as having greater hardships than Brooks.²⁴³ During voir dire, Laws, a self-employed general contractor, approached the trial judge and offered strong reasons why serving on a jury would cause him hardship.²⁴⁴ Specifically, he stated that he had two houses that were nearing completion (one with the occupants moving in that very weekend) and that he had demanding family obligations brought about by his wife just having undergone a hysterectomy, causing him to have complete child care responsibilities during the time of trial.²⁴⁵ Laws' childcare hardship was intensified by the fact that he and his wife were not from the area, and ostensibly did not have relatives to assist with the childcare.²⁴⁶ Although the hardships to Laws were substantially greater than those to Brooks, the prosecutor did not use a peremptory challenge on Laws.²⁴⁷

During its Batson analysis, the Court stated that the question presented at the ²³⁶ Id. at 482.

²³⁷ Id.

²³⁸ Id.

²³⁹ Id. at 482–83.

²⁴⁰ Id. at 481–82. During the trial, the judge's law clerk telephoned Brooks' Dean, Doctor Tillman, and was informed by the dean that the trial would not interfere with Brooks' student-teaching obligations. Id.

²⁴¹ Id. at 482.

²⁴² Id. at 483.

²⁴³ Id. at 483–84.

²⁴⁴ Id.

²⁴⁵ Id.

²⁴⁶ Id.

²⁴⁷ Id. at 484. The Court also noted that the prosecution did not use a peremptory challenge to strike another white juror, John Donnes, who raised the concern that the trial would cause him substantial hardship.

third stage of the Batson inquiry is “whether the defendant has shown purposeful discrimination.”²⁴⁸ In answering this question, the Court found that the prosecution’s proffer of this “pretextual explanation naturally gives rise to an inference of discriminatory intent.”²⁴⁹ The prosecution’s explanation simply was not credible.²⁵⁰ As a result, the Court reversed the judgment of the Louisiana Supreme Court and remanded the case.²⁵¹

IV. LESSONS LEARNED FROM SNYDER V. LOUISIANA

Noticeably absent from the Court’s decision in Snyder v. Louisiana was the prosecutor’s deliberate attempt to bring sensitive racial issues into the case.²⁵² First, the Court made no reference to statements made by the prosecutor during rebuttal argument in the penalty phase regarding the acquittal of O.J. Simpson, a high-profile African-American defendant, for the murders of his ex-wife and a friend, both of whom were white.²⁵³ A jury acquitted Simpson a year before Snyder’s trial.²⁵⁴ Because of Simpson’s acquittal, many white Americans believed that Simpson “was guilty of murdering his wife and that he ‘got away with it.’”²⁵⁵ During his rebuttal argument of the penalty phase of the Snyder trial, the prosecutor urged the all-white jury not to let this O.J. prototype “get away with” murder.²⁵⁶ Because of Miller-El’s declaration that the trial court should examine “all relevant circumstances,”²⁵⁷ the Court could have easily commented on the prosecutor’s attempt to appeal to the jurors’ prejudice during his closing argument. That is, the Court could have stated that the prosecutor’s statements during closing arguments could have been evidence of his intent to discriminate during jury selection.

The Court’s decision also omits any reference to the prosecutor’s pretrial comments to the media referring to the Snyder trial as “his O.J. Simpson case.”²⁵⁸ Snyder’s attorney was so concerned that the prosecutor would refer to the Simpson case during the trial that prior to trial he moved to exclude any reference to the Simpson case.²⁵⁹ However, the trial judge denied the motion because the prosecutor gave his word that he would make no such refer-²⁴⁸ Id. at 484–85.

²⁴⁹ Id. at 485.

²⁵⁰ See id.

²⁵¹ Id. at 486.

²⁵² State v. Snyder, 750 So. 2d 832 (La. 1999) (discussing prosecution’s repeated allusions to the O.J. Simpson trial).

²⁵³ See id.

²⁵⁴ Id. at 864.

²⁵⁵ Id. at 507 (Johnson, J., dissenting).

²⁵⁶ Id. at 506 (Johnson, J., dissenting).

²⁵⁷ Miller-El v. Dretke, 545 U.S. 231, 240 (2005) (citing Batson v. Kentucky, 476 U.S. 79, 96–97 (1986)).

²⁵⁸ State v. Snyder, 750 So. 2d 832, 864 (La. 1999) (Lemmon, J., dissenting).

²⁵⁹ Id.

ences.²⁶⁰

Finally, the Court did not mention the fact that the prosecutor used the Louisiana voir dire procedure known as “backstriking” to eliminate venireman Brooks from the jury.²⁶¹ “Back striking refers to a party’s exercise of a peremptory challenge to strike or excuse a prospective juror after initially accepting him, but prior to the final swearing of the jury panel.”²⁶² The prosecutor’s backstrike of Brooks eliminated the only African-American juror the State had originally accepted for service.²⁶³ The timing of the backstrike of Brooks made the initial acceptance of Brooks suspicious.²⁶⁴

It appears that the Snyder trial commenced with the issues of race and prejudice prevalent in the case as evidenced by the prosecutor’s references to the O.J. Simpson trial, both to the media and in his closing argument.²⁶⁵ The prosecutor’s statements before and during the trial, when viewed with the prosecutor’s peremptory challenges striking all five African-American jurors who survived challenges for cause, made it quite easy for the Court to find that the prosecutor’s peremptory challenges were motivated in large part by race.²⁶⁶ Perhaps the Court felt that a discussion of the Simpson case was unnecessary and sought to avoid adding to the media frenzy surrounding the Simpson trial and verdict. Apparently, the Supreme Court believed that the prosecutor’s motives were evident from his striking of Jeffery Brooks alone.²⁶⁷ It is also possible that the Court wanted to demonstrate that discrimination in jury selection does not have to be blatant or that the prosecutor does not have to admit to discrimination for a Batson violation to exist.²⁶⁸

It is also noteworthy that the Court felt it unnecessary to discuss the defendant’s claim that another African-American prospective juror, Elaine Scott, was struck by the prosecutor for a discriminatory purpose.²⁶⁹ The Court seemingly ²⁶⁰ Id.

²⁶¹ See Snyder v. Louisiana, 552 U.S. 472, 475 (2008).

²⁶² State v. Snyder, 942 So. 2d 484, 508 n.1 (La. 2006) (Johnson, J., dissenting).

²⁶³ Id. at 501 (Kimball, J., dissenting).

²⁶⁴ See Snyder, 750 So. 2d at 863 (Johnson, J., dissenting).

²⁶⁵ Id. at 864 (Johnson, J., dissenting).

²⁶⁶ See id. at 864 (Lemmon, J., dissenting). The prosecutor’s conduct before the Snyder trial also provides some indication of the prosecutor’s intentions. Id. Prior to the trial, the defendant moved to exclude any reference to O.J. Simpson’s acquittal by arguing that the prosecutor had been “all over two [counties] talking about ‘this is his O.J. Simpson case.’” Id. Because the prosecutor stated he would not mention the Simpson case during trial, the trial judge denied the motion. Id.

²⁶⁷ See Snyder v. Louisiana, 552 U.S. 472, 478 (2008).

²⁶⁸ Another explanation for the Court’s failure to discuss these issues is Chief Justice John Roberts’s goal of narrow decisions for greater consensus. This goal allowed the Court to avoid the most difficult questions implicated by the case. See Case Comment, Jury Selection—Batson Challenges, 122 HARV. L. REV. 346, 346–47 (2008).

²⁶⁹ Snyder, 522 U.S. at 478.

chose to discuss the prosecutor's striking of one potential African-American juror, Jeffrey Brooks, to emphasize that a Batson violation can be shown by the prosecution's use of a single peremptory challenge against a potential juror when that challenge is based on race.²⁷⁰ As stated by the Court, "[t]he Constitution forbids striking even a single prospective juror for a discriminatory purpose."²⁷¹

In Snyder v. Louisiana, the Court sent a message to trial judges that they must be more active during voir dire to ensure that race does not play a role in jury selection.²⁷² Snyder focuses on step three of the Batson analysis, in which the Court carefully scrutinized the actions of the trial judge during jury selection.²⁷³ While the decision will not end racial discrimination during jury selection, it enhances the nondiscrimination principles enunciated in Batson, thus giving the Batson decision more context. When Snyder is read in conjunction with Miller-El v. Dretke and Johnson v. California,²⁷⁴ trial court judges, prosecutors, and defense attorneys can learn lessons to assist in handling Batson issues.

As a result of the Snyder decision, it is now clear that trial courts considering Batson issues can conduct side-by-side comparisons of venire persons who were struck with those jurors who were not struck by the prosecutor. When the prosecutor's alleged race-neutral reasons for striking a potential juror do not withstand scrutiny and are found to be a pretext for racial discrimination, the trial judge should find a Batson violation. As often occurs during voir dire, the race-neutral reasons for peremptory challenges invoke a juror's demeanor, such as nervousness.²⁷⁵ In this instance, the trial court should evaluate not only the prosecutor's credibility to determine whether the prosecutor's demeanor conceals a discriminatory intent, but also whether the juror's demeanor can credibly be said to have exhibited the basis for the strike attributed to the juror by the prosecutor.

Additionally, Snyder emphasized that a Batson violation can result from striking a single prospective juror.²⁷⁶ Consequently, a side-by-side comparison of jurors struck by the prosecutor and those allowed to serve becomes even more important to find individual violations without an evident pattern of discrimination. Of course, if a pattern of discrimination by the prosecutor develops, the defendant should object to race based exclusion of potential jurors.²⁷⁷ On the other hand, if there is no pattern of discrimination, and the defendant ²⁷⁰ See id.

²⁷¹ Id. (quoting United States v. Vasquez-Lopez, 22 F.3d 900, 902 (9th Cir. 1994)).

²⁷² See id. at 477.

²⁷³ Id.

²⁷⁴ Miller-El v. Dretke, 545 U.S. 231 (2005); Johnson v. California, 545 U.S. 162 (2005).

²⁷⁵ See Snyder, 552 U.S. at 478-79.

²⁷⁶ Id. at 478.

²⁷⁷ For instance, in Miller-El v. Dretke, after the prosecutor used peremptory challenges to strike ten of the eleven qualified black venire members during jury selection, the defense believes that the prosecutor struck a juror because of race, the defendant is better able to meet his burden of showing a Batson violation. The defendant can convince the trial judge that the race-neutral reason was pretext because the prosecutor did not strike similarly situated jurors.

Furthermore, because of the trial judge's ability to observe the prosecutor's and prospective juror's demeanors, the reviewing court will grant the trial judge substantial deference in handling Batson issues.²⁷⁸ Consequently, the reviewing court will sustain the trial court's ruling on the Batson issue unless it is clearly erroneous.²⁷⁹

For this reason, it is important that lawyers create a record of everything occurring in the courtroom. This record will provide sufficient information from which the trial judge or the appellate court can make a proper determination on the Batson issues. It is often beneficial for attorneys to have a second-chair attorney or legal assistant to record the race of the jurors, types of questions opposing counsel asks, types of challenges made against jurors of a particular race, and any disparate treatment by opposing counsel of people of different races. Disparate treatment could be the attorney's tone of voice, language used, or general demeanor towards one racial group as compared to another. This attention to detail will help the attorney make the kind of detailed record that is necessary to successfully challenge or defend against a Batson challenge.

An example of disparate treatment of racial groups occurred in Miller-El v. Dretke when the prosecutor posed different voir dire questions to the African-American and non-African-American panel members on two different subjects.²⁸⁰ First, the prosecutor used disparate lines of questions for the African-American panelists and non-African-American panelists on their views of capital punishment.²⁸¹ The African-American panelists were questioned with a "graphic script" that detailed Texas's capital punishment methodologies, which was meant to induce qualms about applying the death penalty.²⁸² These doubts about the death penalty were designed to produce an appearance of hesitancy to consider the death penalty and thus to obtain credible neutral reasons for a peremptory challenge of a prospective juror who expressed the uncertainty.²⁸³ Meanwhile, white panelists were given a bland description of the death penalty before being questioned about their individual feelings on the matter.²⁸⁴ Additionally, all African-American panelists were subjected to a trick question attorney objected after seeing a pattern of strikes against black venire members. Miller-El, 545 U.S. at 236.

²⁷⁸ Snyder, 552 U.S. at 477.

²⁷⁹ Id.

²⁸⁰ Miller-El, 545 U.S. at 255.

²⁸¹ Id.

²⁸² Id.

²⁸³ Id.

²⁸⁴ Id. (citing Miller-El v. Cockrell, 537 U. S. 322, 332 (2003)).

about the minimum acceptable penalty for murder with the purpose of inducing a disqualifying answer, while only a small percentage of non-African-Americans were subject to the trick question.²⁸⁵ As a result of the disparate questions and other tactics used by the prosecutor, the Supreme Court in Miller-El found that the prosecutor's peremptory challenges of African-American panelists violated the Batson principles.²⁸⁶

When a defendant makes a Batson challenge based on race, she should state the particular race of the person (or persons) improperly struck by the prosecution and be able to rebut the alleged neutral reasons given by the prosecution. In challenging the prosecution's exercise of peremptory challenges, the defendant should state as many details as possible to support the challenge. The details could be used for statistical analysis of the number of peremptory challenges used by the prosecution on members of a particular race. For example, in Miller-El v. Dretke, the prosecutors used peremptory challenges to strike ninety-one percent of the eligible African-American venire members.²⁸⁷ Alternatively, the details could provide side-by-side comparisons of similarly situated venire panelists of a particular race who were allowed to serve on the jury with those who were struck by the prosecution. For instance, the Court in Snyder conducted side-by-side comparisons of some African-American prospective jurors who were struck and white jurors who were allowed to serve.²⁸⁸ When the Snyder Court performed a comparative analysis of jurors Jeffrey Brooks and Ronald Laws, it found that the prosecutor's reason for striking Jeffrey Brooks, an African-American prospective juror, should also have applied to Ronald Laws, a white juror who the prosecutor did not strike.²⁸⁹

If the race-neutral reason given for striking a member of a particular race applies with equal force to a member of a different race, and the prosecutor did not exercise a peremptory challenge against that person, there may be sufficient evidence to prove purposeful discrimination under Batson's third step.²⁹⁰ To satisfy step one of the Batson test, that is, to make a prima facie showing that the prosecution discriminated in its use of peremptory challenges, Johnson v. California states that the defendant must show that the prosecution exercised its peremptory challenges based wholly or in part on race.²⁹¹ The prima facie inquiry mandated by Batson is minimal and is met when the defendant produces evidence sufficient to permit the trial court to draw an inference that discrimination has occurred.²⁹² The Court's decision in Johnson clarified the burden for the defendant in step one of the Batson analysis. This slight burden draws ²⁸⁵ Id. at 265–66.

²⁸⁶ Id. at 266.

²⁸⁷ Id. at 241 (citing Miller-El v. Cockrell, 537 U. S. 322, 342 (2003)).

²⁸⁸ Snyder v. Louisiana, 553 U.S. 472, 483–84 (2008).

²⁸⁹ Id. at 484.

²⁹⁰ Miller-El, 545 U.S. at 241.

²⁹¹ Johnson v. California, 545 U.S. 162, 170–71 (2005).

²⁹² Id. at 169 (quoting Batson v. Kentucky, 476 U.S. 79, 94 (1986)).

attention to the actions and words of the prosecutor in exercising peremptory challenges.

Before responding with a race-neutral explanation, the prosecution should allow the trial judge to determine if the defendant has made the prima facie showing required by Batson. Otherwise, if the trial judge fails to rule specifically on whether a defendant asserting a Batson challenge met the burden to establish a prima facie case of discrimination based on race, yet does rule on the ultimate question of intentional discrimination in step three, the question of whether the defendant has made a prima facie showing becomes moot.²⁹³ The prosecutor should allow the defendant to respond, because it is possible that the defendant could fail to make a prima facie showing of race discrimination. If the prima facie showing is not made, the Batson challenge fails and the voir dire process continues.

If the defendant does make a prima facie showing of racial discrimination in step two of the Batson analysis, the trial judge should require the prosecution to offer a race-neutral reason for exercising the peremptory challenge, because the burden of production shifts to the proponent of the strike to provide a race-neutral explanation.²⁹⁴ It is not sufficient for the prosecutor to simply deny having a discriminatory motive or to affirm good faith.²⁹⁵ The race-neutral reason does not have to be persuasive or even plausible, though, because at this stage the issue is the facial validity of the prosecutor's explanation.²⁹⁶ However, the race-neutral reason does have to be persuasive in order to survive the court's discretion in stage three.²⁹⁷ "Unless a discriminatory intent is inherent in the prosecutor's explanation, the reason offered will be deemed race neutral."²⁹⁸ Notwithstanding this low threshold at step two, the prosecution should provide enough details on the record so that the trial judge will have sufficient information to make an appropriate determination at step three of the Batson analysis. For example, in Snyder v. Louisiana, the first reason given by the prosecutor for striking Jeffrey Brooks, the African-American venire person, was that "he looked very nervous to [the prosecutor] throughout the questioning."²⁹⁹ The Court did not presume that the trial judge credited the prosecutor's assertion that Brooks was nervous because the prosecutor did not provide any details of Brooks' nervousness, the fact that "nervousness cannot be shown from a cold transcript," and the fact that the trial judge did not make an actual determination concerning Brooks' nervousness.³⁰⁰ In other words, because the ²⁹³ Hernandez v. New York, 500 U.S. 352, 352 (1991).

²⁹⁴ Purkett v. Elem, 514 U.S. 765, 767 (1995).

²⁹⁵ Id. at 768.

²⁹⁶ Id.

²⁹⁷ Id.

²⁹⁸ Id. (citing Hernandez, 500 U.S. at 360).

²⁹⁹ Snyder v. Louisiana, 552 U.S. 472, 478 (2008) (citing Snyder v. State, 942 So. 2d 484, 496 (La. 2006)).

³⁰⁰ Id. at 479 (citing Snyder, 942 So. 2d at 496).

trial judge did not make any comment regarding Brooks' demeanor, it was not clear from the record whether the trial judge considered the alleged nervousness at all.³⁰¹ Consequently, the Court did not evaluate this reason for the prosecutor's peremptory challenge.

Step three of the Batson analysis requires the trial judge to consider "all relevant circumstances" and determine if the explanation given for the strike is convincingly race-neutral.³⁰² If the record does not support the prosecutor's proffered reason for the Batson challenge or indicates that the prosecutor's reason is "fantastic or improbable," this could be found as a pretext for the purpose of discrimination.³⁰³ For an appellate court to consider a trial court's determination on a Batson issue properly, the appellate court must have sufficient information from the record in order to make its evaluation. Consequently, when the defense questions the prosecution's peremptory challenges, the prosecutor should request that the trial judge make a finding on the record regarding all of the reasons given for exercising a peremptory challenge. This ensures that the court considers each race-neutral reason, thus producing a more detailed record for appellate review.

Another effect of the Snyder decision is that it may have expanded the authority of the reviewing court to consider alleged Batson violations. Simultaneously, the Snyder decision may have also taken away some of the trial court's discretion in deciding Batson issues. While the Snyder Court emphasized that it would defer to the trial court's rulings on Batson issues except in "exceptional circumstances,"³⁰⁴ the Court also reiterated that the trial and reviewing courts must examine "all of the circumstances that bear on the issue of racial animosity."³⁰⁵ By giving the reviewing court the power to consider all relevant circumstances bearing on racial animosity, the Court effectively granted the appellate court an opportunity to eradicate racism in jury selection that was unavailable to the trial court. The appellate court is clearly in a better position than the trial court to observe all relevant circumstances, because a reviewing court considers everything in the record as a whole. During jury selection, the trial judge is busy handling objections, observing the demeanor and credibility of the lawyers and potential jurors, listening to the type and tone of questions posed by lawyers, and generally making first hand observations of occurrences in the courtroom. Because the trial judge has a myriad of responsibilities during jury selection, she could easily miss many forms of discrimination, subtle or not, that may occur during voir dire. Because the appellate judge reviews the record in toto, she may find discrimination where the trial judge did not.

Simply stated, many occurrences may not be apparent to the trial judge but ³⁰¹ Id.

³⁰² Id. at 484–85.

³⁰³ Id. at 485 (citing Hernandez, 500 U.S. at 365).

³⁰⁴ Id. at 477 (quoting Hernandez, 500 U.S. at 366).

³⁰⁵ Id. at 478 (citing Miller-El v. Dretke, 545 U.S. 231, 239 (2005)).

may be apparent to the reviewing court as it considers the entire record of the trial. For example, disparate types of questions posed to prospective jurors of different races may be much more apparent when an appellate court reviews them as part of the record, as the appellate court has as much time as it needs to consider Batson issues, than when a trial court observes them during the hurried and often fast-paced voir dire process. Moreover, the reviewing court is able to compare the prosecutor's questions during voir dire to those statements and questions made at different points during the trial, such as those made during opening statement, closing argument, and during the prosecution's case in chief, to ascertain the prosecutor's real intent during jury selection. Consequently, the Snyder Court may have indirectly granted appellate courts the power to consider evidence in the record that the trial court did not consider. In this instance, it is possible that the trial court, while being vigilant during the trial, may have inadvertently missed or not fully understood the effect of an action of the prosecution bearing on racial animosity.

Although the Court in Snyder stressed how important it is for the trial court to make its findings on the record, the Court missed an opportunity to provide guidance to judges, lawyers, and litigants on how to handle mixed-motive reasons given by the prosecutor for exercising a peremptory challenge. Mixed-motive issues arise when the prosecutor executing the peremptory challenge states multiple reasons for exercising the peremptory challenge, one reason being discriminatory and the other being nondiscriminatory.³⁰⁶ The Court has not yet ruled on whether a mixed-motive analysis is consistent with the intent of Batson and its progeny.³⁰⁷ Because the prosecution in Snyder gave two reasons for exercising a peremptory challenge against Brooks, the arguably proper "nervousness" reason, and the other, pretextual concern about Brooks' student-teaching obligations,³⁰⁸ the Court could have opined on whether the peremptory challenge of Brooks would have resulted in a Batson violation.

Would the result in Snyder have been different if the Court had applied a mixed-motive analysis? The outcome should have been the same. Based on the Court's rationale in Snyder, the prosecutor's strike of Brooks was motivated in substantial part by discriminatory intent.³⁰⁹ Consequently, even if the trial court had accepted the prosecutor's statement about Brooks' nervousness as legitimate, the Court should still have found a Batson violation. After all, in recent cases discussing the Batson three-step process,³¹⁰ the Court has continually sent the message that racial discrimination in jury selection will not be ³⁰⁶ See Russell D. Covey, The Unbearable Lightness of Batson: Mixed Motives and Discrimination in Jury Selection, 66 MD. L. REV. 279, 281 (2007).

³⁰⁷ Id. at 282.

³⁰⁸ Snyder, 552 U.S. at 479–80.

³⁰⁹ Id. at 485.

³¹⁰ See Johnson v. California, 545 U.S. 162 (2005); Miller-El v. Dretke, 545 U.S. 231 (2005).

tolerated. Because the prosecutor's discriminatory intent in Snyder was clear, it would have been inconsistent with the Batson principles for the peremptory challenge to stand in light of that intent.

V. CONCLUSION

Twenty years later, the Supreme Court is still construing the Batson decision.³¹¹ While the Court may have vacillated in expounding on how step two of the Batson test should be applied, the Court has continued to stress that it will not tolerate racial discrimination during jury selection in criminal cases. In Snyder v. Louisiana, the Court continued its attempt to eradicate racial discrimination during voir dire by underscoring that a Batson violation can result from the striking of a single potential juror. By allowing a side-by-side comparison of a prospective juror struck by the prosecutor with a peremptory challenge with jurors who were not struck by the prosecutor, trial and appellate courts should now be more able to assess the real motive of parties during jury selection, thus enforcing the Court's mandate that racial discrimination should have no place in jury selection.

While appellate courts must still grant substantial deference to trial courts in their rulings during jury selection in criminal cases, trial courts must apply each of the Batson steps according to principles articulated by the Supreme Court. They must also simultaneously announce their rulings on the record so that the reviewing courts can clearly understand the bases of the rulings relative to the exercise of peremptory challenges. Failure by the trial courts to do so can lead to reversals. Further, by emphasizing to reviewing courts that they have the power to consider all relevant circumstances bearing on racial animosity, the Supreme Court may have given appellate courts additional power to eradicate racism during jury selection.

Although there are many uncertainties left in determining the validity of peremptory challenges, Snyder v. Louisiana offers a major step toward reconciling conflicting Supreme Court precedents while more clearly explicating the requirements for each step of a Batson analysis. Although Snyder will most definitely not deter all instances of peremptory challenges used for discriminatory purposes, it should at least serve to make such practice more recognizable and therefore more likely to result in reversal.

³¹¹ Batson v. Kentucky, 476 U.S. 79 (1986).

