The Mary Beaudry Book Award for the Archaeology of Food

Sponsored by The University of Alabama Press and the Archaeology of Food book series

Series editors Karen Bescherer Metheny (kmetheny@bu.edu), Christine Hastorf (hastorf@berkeley.edu), and Tanya M. Peres (tanya.peres@fsu.edu)

Mary Beaudry, a founding coeditor of the Archaeology of Food book series at The University of Alabama Press, was a beloved influential and inspiring scholar. The first award in her name will be offered in 2024 and then every 3 years for the best book in the series.

The Archaeology of Food book series offers new contributions and critical findings in food archaeology, chiefly through case studies that explore issues such as past diets, origins of agriculture, plant and animal domestication and exploitation, global networks of food exchange in the past, colonialism and food, food and gender in ancient and early modern times, food and identity in the past, human-environmental interactions around food, archaeology of food technologies, and archaeological approaches to everyday meals and feasts. Contributions to the series also consider the relevance of food archaeology to contemporary issues, from sustainable agricultural practice and preserving biodiversity to documenting the effects of globalization and cultural encounters.

For prospectus and series information, please contact a series editor or UAP senior acquisitions editor Wendi Schnauffer (wschnauffer@uapress.ua.edu).
