

Anne Krook began her career as an assistant professor at the University of Michigan, Ann Arbor, where she taught for seven years. After moving to Seattle, she worked for Amazon.com for thirteen years, and later worked as VP of various startup and engineering companies. She now advises students and faculty at universities and companies.

Humanities in the Real World: Workshop and Lecture with Anne Krook

2:00-5:00 PM

“The graduate students’ and postdocs’ guide to the non-academic job market”

This three-hour workshop teaches graduate students and postdocs how their PhD degrees are viewed on the non-academic job market and how to prepare to enter that market while in graduate school, including how to identify skills and write a resume.

6:00-7:00 PM

“But what are you going to do with a humanities major?”
A guide for the perplexed”

This one-hour talk will aid undergraduate humanities majors in understanding how hiring managers view their skills, how they can identify and describe their skills when they are ready to enter the job market, and how to talk to parents and relatives about their majors and their job prospects.

Thursday, October 29, 2015
Metcalf Ballroom East Balcony
George Sherman Union

Also, on October 30, Anne Krook will hold privately scheduled appointments with interested students in the morning and afternoon.

Sponsored by the Boston University Center for the Humanities, the Center for Career Development, and the College and Graduate School of Arts and Sciences.